33RD YEAR—NO. 30.

BAY ST. LOUIS AND VICINITY

LOCAL FLASHES

Facts and Fancies.

It is always painful to refer either directly or indirectly to a subject that spells more taxes. But the day is not coming, for it has already dawned, when taxpayers of Bay St. Louis, through their representatives, the board of Mayor and Aldermen, will be called upon to reckon with the building of a new school house.

No one could authoritatively say so as yet, but the presumption would find general support that the present central school building is far from being fit and, it might be said, safe for the children. But it is apparent the building is not as strong and substantial as it might be for the heavy use and important part it takes in our daily lives considering the children.

The building, of frame structure, was erected in 1893. The method of heating the place is antiquated, and expensive, to say nothing of constant fire hazard to which some three or four hundred children are subjected. While there are fire escapes to the rear, aside from the front entrance, there are no regular fire escapes. The building is one of many "DANGEROUS POSSIBILITIES." It is distasteful to call our main school house names, but it is a reality. Someone asks, "What about the plumbing?" It is by no means modern. There should be more fire escapes in order to comply with the school law.

To get back to our meat, the time is here for consideration of a question which permits of no banter or words, and the quicker this serious problem is going to be met with and disposed of the better, tax increase or anything else to the contrary. The question is up for discussion. Must be looked square in the face. There is no equivocation. To fail is to deceive ourselves.

A long-felt want is to be supplied Bay St. Louis by the Shell Beach resort, across the Bay. Many tourists and other visitors have come to Bay St. Louis, put up at one of the local hotels, visited around and were soon gone. It is patent the visitor must be entertained if not amused. Golf solves the problem, and the splendid course at Shell Beach—the Bay will solve the problem until courses nearer home will have been established.

Not only tourists and others who seek the mildness of climate and beauty of land play golf, but our citizens are turning to the national pastime and health-giving recreation. No less a personage than W. J. Cox, local legal light, has become quite a golfer, and Jos. O. Mauffray, merchant, is quite an adept with the golf stick. The Misses Mauffray and their brothers play good golf and there are others from Bay St. Louis who frequent the course. There is a terrible fascination about golf. The farther away the links and the more inaccessible, seemingly the better the golfer likes.

George E. Pitcher, local resident, who travels to New York with the same sang froid the average Bay St. Louisian goes to and from New Orleans, tells how New Yorkers will leave the metropolis for week-end trips down to Pinckney and other Carolina resorts, practically a day and a night's ride, to play golf. They do not go.

He tells how he was returning home from New York during last winter when a major portion of the passengers on board the Pullman in which he was an occupant, at the next day at a point in North Carolina. They had left New York Friday evening late and would be back at their offices for Monday. This golf must be great. There must be something irresistible to a sport that is so compelling. And again: If you are stout the doctor will say play golf. If thin, do the same thing. It seems a panacea for all ills. The old play golf or playing golf makes you fit to live that long to play golf.

Any pastime that will keep one in fit condition is to be encouraged. It is no wonder then golfing has become so popular. Friend Gormley, of Shell Beach on the Bay, has the finest golf courses in the South. The beautiful and spacious log cabin like clubhouse is finished and all is in readiness for an early formal opening. Visitors will be entertained there at all times. It is proposed to have regular dinner dances every Saturday night and the patronage from Bay St. Louis and along the Coast will justify the enterprise. It will be a resort for the better class. This will make it all the more delightful and attractive, and it is easy to bespeak for such enterprise unlimited success.

With work started on the building of the new steel bridge at Chef Menteur and Rigolets to be finished within a comparatively short time, many commuters are in hope, with the completion of the two huge spans, the Louisville and Nashville will run on closer schedule. The time between Bay St. Louis and New Orleans reduced to an hour flat would be received with general acclaim. It might well be said the number who would make their homes over-the-lake, as New Orleans residents are wont to term the Gulf Coast, would increase. The trip to

HUMAN SHOULD GUARD AGAINST ANTHRAX

Disease, Better Known as Charbon, Over State—Disease Contagious From Live Stock to Human—State Board Chief Advises.

F. J. Underwood, M. D., executive officer, Mississippi State Board of Health, advises the public against anthrax, now over the State. He sends The Sea Coast Echo the following specially prepared article to meet the situation. Dr. Underwood says:

There is at the present time a widely disseminated epidemic of anthrax within the State. Anthrax is among the oldest of the known infectious diseases of man and animals. Anthrax belongs to that group of diseases which occurs primarily in the lower animals and secondarily in man. Infection is found especially in cattle, but also in horses, sheep and other animals. Anthrax has a world-wide distribution. In man the infection may enter the skin or the lungs or may enter the digestive tract and produce intestinal lesions. Human anthrax comes about through the handling of sick animals, carcasses of dead animals, skins, hair, etc. In anthrax of the skin the infection usually enters through slight abrasions, scratches or small wounds, especially on the forearm, neck or face.

Many cases of anthrax in the United States have been traced to shaving brushes made of horse hair. In Massachusetts 47 cases from shaving brushes were reported in 1917. The spores have been carried to the skin by flies. It has been proven that anthrax may be transferred from animal to animal through the bite of the stable fly. The prevention of the disease must first be directed to the suppression of the infection in animals. Therefore, the proper prevention of anthrax consists in the veterinary control of the disease among animals. Among animals anthrax can be prevented very largely by keeping them away from infected areas or by immunizing them by vaccination. It is stated by some authorities that sick animals should be killed. Certainly they should be isolated and all carcasses burned.

The neglect of precaution in disposing of anthrax carcasses favors the spread of the infection through the activity of carrion feeders. Buzzards may carry infection for long distances and contaminate clean ground or water through contamination on their feet and beaks. Dogs discharge anthrax spores in their feces several days after feeding upon an anthrax carcass. Five cases of human anthrax have occurred since the outbreak. One death has been reported—that of a negro man, presumably infected by the sting of a fly. It is well known that the stable fly may carry the virus of anthrax on its proboscis and when it penetrates the skin of a person a fatal infection results. This method of transfer from animals to man is rare, it is true, but it is an ever-present possibility. We would warn against skinning or otherwise handling the carcasses of animal victims.

OLD SPANISH TRAIL REPORTED IN THE SECOND STAGE

There Are Six Stages in Transcontinental Highway Work—Interesting Address by Harrel B. Ayres, Managing Director and Master of the Project.

ADDRESS DELIVERED BEFORE N. O. ROTARY.

Different Stages of Construction Reviewed Addressing Audience. This Month—Sixth Stage, Roadside Beautification—Sign Boards Removed.

Few people realize the magnitude of the task of creating and constructing a transcontinental highway. Few highway associations live through the discouragements of the work. One highway association lives because a group of millionaires are its directors. The Old Spanish Trail organization lives because there is an increasing number of dauntless men and women who are fighting their way through the greatest series of obstacles that ever confronted a transcontinental highway project—it must cross bays, marshes, rivers, deserts, mountains and plains in its reach across the continent. There are six stages in the development of a great national trunkline:

First is Promotion. This involves the scouting and fixing of a route that can be really made a first class, continuous road from sea to sea. This Old Spanish Trail cost heart-breaking scouting through primitive country where many sections had neither roads nor paths. Practical routes had to be found, and engineering problems, the willingness and the capacity of the people to co-operate and build, and the political and local conditions in eight States and the nearly two hundred cities, towns and counties had to be wrestled with. It took seven years of promotional work before the Old Spanish Trail was in a position where its construction as an unbroken highway was assured.

Second is Construction. We have 2,840 miles to bring to a point where travel will be possible at all times. In this second stage the highway may still have some narrow sections, sharp turns, blind curves, narrow bridges and dangerous railroad crossings and an undesirable surface, but to get it open for travel is the primary thought. The Old Spanish Trail is now in this stage—in another year it will be comfortably traveled from St. Augustine to San Diego. In two years busses and service cars will connect Florida and California.

Third is City Street Improvement. The Federal and State officials do not control construction in the city and town limits, and city officials are invariably slow working out a satisfactory way through their streets. Suburban streets are often narrow and crooked, the products of short-sighted subdivision work. We have made very little headway in this third stage of work. Invariably the way through the city or town is crooked and the roadbed is rough.

Fourth is An Organized Travel Department. A highway is like a railroad—it must be advertised. Travel comforts must be fostered, auto camps provided, country hotels and restaurants improved, and travel information gathered, edited, printed and distributed. We are in the midst of this work. It is a far bigger task than realized. If any of you try today to get information to carry you pleasantly over any considerable portion of the Old Spanish Trail or other highways, you will realize how much this travel information is needed, and how much careful marking is needed. Old Spanish Trail cars have traveled many thousands of miles gathering information for national distribution and to bring travel into the Old Spanish Trail country.

Fifth is Re-Construction. The widening of narrow sections, putting new bridges where old ones were allowed to remain, lengthening curves, removing sharp turns and railroad crossings, and improving the surface. Accidents are happening at these places, people are being killed. The highway departments, however, are doing all they can. This re-construction work is another big task. It will involve years and many millions of dollars.

Sixth is Roadside Beautification. The women of the Old Spanish Trail are already undertaking this. At the New Orleans convention in 1923 they planned the work, but this, too, is a mighty task. At San Antonio the women have had over sixteen truckloads of advertising signs removed. The State maintenance engineers and the county officials are co-operating. Making the roadside horrible with advertising signs is becoming unpopular. Laws must be passed to help in this work. The women also plan to encourage ornamental entrances and nice fences; they will mark county and State lines and plant trees and shrubbery. Zero monuments have been dedicated at San Diego and at San Antonio. One will be dedicated at St. Augustine. Then an accurate survey of the mileage can be made as fast as the highway is completed on its permanent location.

"SCARAMOUCHE" TO BE SEEN IN BAY ST. LOUIS ON SCREEN.

Rex Ingram Production of Photoplay of French Revolution Has Been Acclaimed as One of the Masterpieces of Filmdom—At G. & G. Theatre Next Thursday, July 31st.

"Scaramouche," a Rex Ingram production for Metro Pictures Corporation, adapted from Rafael Sabatini's novel of the same name, will come to the A. & G. Theatre for one day, July 31st. This picture, a feature in ten reels, has played special engagements in the larger cities and comes to Bay St. Louis acclaimed by critics as one of the masterpieces of filmdom.

Ingram, from all accounts, has surpassed his production of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" with this picture. "Scaramouche" is a story of the French Revolution. It tells the romance of Andre-Louis Moreau (Ramón Novarro) and Aline de Kerac (Alice Terry). Andre-Louis has been brought up as the ward of Aline's uncle. The Marquis de la Tour d'Azyr (Lewis Stone), a haughty aristocrat and man of fashion, killed Andre-Louis' friend, Philippe, because of his revolutionary sentiments, and on the Marquis Andre-Louis has sworn eternal vengeance. To make matters worse the Marquis is courting Aline.

Andre's seditious speeches cause him to be sought for the gallows, and in escaping from the pursuing gendarmes, he joins a strolling band of players and becomes Scaramouche, the clown. Bitterness against Aline leads him into an affair with the leading lady of the troupe, but he ends this when the girl accepts attentions from the Marquis.

Skilled in fencing, Andre-Louis Moreau is persuaded to become substitute deputy in the National Assembly of France for a deputy who was killed in the series of duels brought by the aristocrats against the people's representatives. In a duel with La Tour d'Azyr, that is the culmination of his activities in the Assembly, Andre-Louis wounds the Marquis, and Andre's misadventure, standing of Aline's actions after the duel further widens the breach between them.

The fires of rebellion among the lower and middle classes of Paris are finally fanned into open revolt. The patriot Dalton (George Siegmann) leads the mob to the Tuileries, where the monarchy is overthrown. The Marquis escapes from the massacre at the Tuileries, and seeks shelter at the house where also is Aline, who has been unable to escape from the city. Andre-Louis finally fanned into open revolt. The Marquis escapes from the massacre at the Tuileries, and seeks shelter at the house where also is Aline, who has been unable to escape from the city.

The thirty principal characters in "Scaramouche" include, beside Ramon Novarro, Lewis Stone and Alice Terry, who were the triumvirate that appeared in Ingram's "Prisoners of Zenith," Lloyd Ingraham, Julia Swayne Gordon and Edith Allen.

Willis Goldbeck adapted the story to the screen, the photography was by John F. Seitz; Curt Rehfeld was production manager, and Grant Whytock editor. Costumes were designed by O'Kane Cornwell and Evamay Roth and executed by Van Horn.

YOUTH FALLS OFF TRAIN—IS KILLED.

Young Man Was Well Known and Popular With the Younger Set of Bay St. Louis.

E. J. Tremoulet, 18, of 4490 de Montluzin street, New Orleans, son of the purchasing agent of the American Sugar Refinery, was instantly killed Saturday afternoon about four o'clock, when he fell from a Louisville and Nashville train at Elysian Fields avenue and Urquhart street. His head was crushed.

Young Tremoulet was on his way to Bay St. Louis, where his parents have a summer residence. It is believed he walked to the vestibule of one of the coaches, presumably to smoke. It is thought that while standing between two coaches he lost his balance and fell under the wheels.

He was employed as a draftsman by the Lukens Iron Works. The unfortunate young man was well known and popular with the younger set of Bay St. Louis, and the suddenness of his demise, as well as the terrible manner of it, shocked the entire community.

A young man of exemplary habits and a sunny disposition, "Gen" was exceptional company anywhere and eagerly sought.

He resided, with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Tremoulet, at 206 Hancock street.

The Echo extends its sincere condolences to the bereaved family.

CHILD'S HEALTH CONFERENCE.

Ten Babies Given "Perfect" Buttons. Good Work by the State Board Accomplished.

Sixty babies were examined at the Child's Health Conference that convened at the Hancock county courthouse on Thursday, the 24th. Ten babies were found in perfect health and given "buttons" signifying their perfection. Out of the lot examined nine children were found who, while not defective, had not been vaccinated against smallpox, which the State Board of Health requires of every child in the State above the age of two years.

Dr. Sharp, of Pascagoula, Miss.; Dr. Randolph Plunkett, of Bay St. Louis, and Dr. J. A. Mead, county health officer, were the examining physicians.

Miss Nancy B. Short, county health nurse, was in charge of the children and was assisted by Miss Carrie B. Clark, Jackson county nurse; Miss Ida Hood, of Forest county, and Miss Laura S. Heath, of the State Board of Health of Jackson county.

The County Health Department of Hancock county is deeply indebted to the excellent co-operation of the Study Club, who have greatly assisted in the welfare and advancement of Bay St. Louis.

The Bay High School girls gave their willing assistance during the day and the doctors and nurses were deeply grateful to the young ladies.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Dillon and Messrs. A. D. Gebhard and Charles Henry returned home the week from a pleasant trip of over two weeks. They left here in Mr. Dillon's new automobile and traveled over a thousand miles, to be exact, 1,096, in eleven days, going by way of Gulfport, Hattiesburg, Laurel, Memphis, then through Arkansas to Mississippi, Cairo, to Peoria, Ill., where they visited old friends, where they went to Riceville, Illinois, to pay a visit to relatives. They made the trip going in six days and five days returning. They reported the roads in splendid condition, and say traveling by auto is a great pleasure, also a healthy exercise. The scenes through the country were beautiful and the trip was greatly enjoyed—still they are glad to be back home in the good old Bay once more.
